Bryce Steele is an experienced business leader, advisor, consultant and facilitator, with high-level experience in industry-to-research collaboration facilitation, change management, innovation, commercialisation, business & market strategy, manufacturing and project management.

Bryce has been involved in the successful delivery of organisational improvement, value chain collaboration, innovation and commercialisation projects across a wide range of industries including rail, automotive, manufacturing, ICT, electronics, clean technology and construction. He has strategic and operational experience in specialist change management and commercialisation service providers, and as an executive manager in a number of businesses, including three of his own.

Bryce's recent experience includes project management and facilitation of organisational development projects, industry sector SME-research collaboration programs and innovation program management with federal and state government departments.

Bryce has worked with technology businesses, government departments and corporates to assist them to realise the potential from innovation and gain the multiplier effect possible from effective engagement and collaboration with solution and strategic partners. He previously spent 15 years as a contract and project manager in the construction industry.
